

Todd Crow

Princeton, NJ | <https://crowbell.design> | todd@crowbell.design | 609-613-6767

Pick me!

So excited to apply for the Technologist, Marketing Automation role at Zelis.

I'm a MarTech developer with more than a decade of experience. I'm ready for my next challenge in marketing technology. My current role isn't the right fit — the work and industry don't align with where I want to grow. When I saw what Zelis is building, in a B2B2C environment embracing collaboration and continuous improvement, it felt worth pursuing right away.

At Rakuten I led our ESP migration and reduced automated campaign deployment time by 30%, supporting multiple business units along the way.

Why I'm a good fit for Zelis:

Expertise. I engineer marketing automation workflows end-to-end — campaigns, triggered sends, journeys, QA, deliverability, and the API integrations that tie it all together. Beyond HTML and CSS, I've done it in AMPScript (SalesForce), Handlebars (Iterable), FreeMarker (MessageGears), too.

Leadership. I make my teammates' jobs easier and champion collaboration across functions.

Ownership. When something needs to get done right, you can count on me to see it through. Pixel-perfect rendering across inboxes, keeping domain health clean at 3–4M sends/month, staying on top of Email industry developments.

Curiosity. I learn platforms fast. I find creative solutions others miss. I don't just build emails; I build tools and systems.

Why Zelis is a good fit for me:

Your forward-thinking company mission can do a great deal of good. I see a genuine commitment to diversity and inclusion. I want to work on a team where creativity, curiosity, and automation are priorities.

If you have any questions at all, let's talk!

Best,

Todd Crow

<https://crowbell.design>